"The Death of Adam" is one of the most challenging books I've read in a long time. One does not need to agree with Robinson's religious justifications for her positions. She makes her case clearly by simply showing how the Darwinian path we are on leads to destruction, for our environment, for our nation, and ultimately for the human race.

The Death of Adam Essays on Modern Thought. By MARILYNNE ROBINSON Houghton Mifflin Company. Read the Review. DARWINISM American culture has entered a period in which atavism looks to us for all the world like progress. The stripping away of humane constraints to liberate great "natural" forces, such as capital flow or the (soi-disant) free market, has acquired such heady momentum that no one ...

As with her earlier works, Robinson's essays are marked by her uneasiness with the workings of society and human consciousness. Here she attempts to counter people's disturbingly easy acceptance of the "prevailing view of things" by taking a "contrarian" approach that assumes any side—in fact, each—may be wrong. Her aim is not to ridicule but to provide alternatives: "Put aside what we know, and it will start to speak to us again," she says. Her essays on John ...

In the tradition of nineteenth-century novelists who turned to the essay, Marilynne Robinson offers an authoritative approach to refining the ideas our culture has handed down to us. Whether considering how the McGuffey readers were inspired by Midwestern abolitionists; how creationism, "long owned by the Religious Right," has spurred on contemporary Darwinism; or how John Calvin, who was a ...

Marilynne Robinson, The Death of Adam: Essays on Modern Thought (New York; Picador, 2005). I love this book. Yet, it's not an easy book to read. I found myself on numerous occasions reaching for the dictionary (words like lumpenproletariat and priggishness). At other times I wonder where the tangent she appeared to be taking her readers would end. Yet, in these essays, Robinson always came ...

Marilynne Robinson concludes her essay with the idea that the death of Adam means the death of much more than many people realize. Throughout the essay, she gives a very persuasive argument against Darwinism and says that "the modern is that science exposed religion as a delusion and more or less supplanted it. But science cannot serve in the place of religion because it cannot generate an ...
